

Jean LaFauci Schutt

Jean LaFauci Schutt is a national certified counselor who graduated from Teachers College, Columbia University with her masters in psychological counseling. Her clinical experience includes providing counseling, assessment, psycho-education, crisis intervention, case management, and outreach to adults and children in both individual and group modalities as well supervising bachelors and masters level counselors and social workers.

Her disaster mental health work in service delivery, needs assessment, and program development has been focused in the areas of psychological recovery and preparedness, post traumatic stress, stress management, and outreach following the September 11th attacks, anthrax attacks, sniper shootings, code orange alert stress, war in Iraq, Hurricane Isabel, local emergencies, and cumulative stress.

She has presented and conducted trainings for other professionals at various events such as the American Counseling Association Convention and Countering Terrorism Conference and guest-lectured at the George Washington University and University of Maryland. She is currently a doctoral candidate and research assistant at The George Washington University conducting her dissertation research on traumatic stress in emergency management professionals.