

Mike Curry

Mike Curry started his employment in National Geographic's photo lab in 1981 and now is a manager in General Services where he helps coordinate health, safety and environmental compliance for the Society as well as overseeing the internal printing operations.

He has served on a number of health and safety and emergency preparedness committees including the Washington Federal Safety and Health Council and the National Capitol Region Emergency Responders Executive Committee (NCR-ER).

Mike completed the State of Ohio Machine Trades Master Journeyman's program in 1979. He also completed both the Management and Environmental Managers programs at the George Washington University Center for Career Education. He is OSHA-certified collateral duty safety and health officer and trained in ergonomics.

He lives in Alexandria, Virginia where he is active in many community organizations, operates a small business and serves as Chair of the City of Alexandria's Board of Zoning Appeals.